HISTORY

Biskupin

Biskupin is one of the most important archaeological sites in Poland.

It was built over 2,700 years ago by an early Slavic people.

The village stood on a small island and had wooden houses and strong walls made of oak.

People lived there in a well-organized community with streets and workshops.

Today, Biskupin is an open-air museum where visitors can see how people lived in ancient times.

It is a symbol of Poland's early history and a popular place for school trips and tourists.

GEOGRAPHY

Salar de Uyuni

Salar de Uyuni is the largest salt flat in the world.

It is located in Bolivia, high in the Andes Mountains.

The flat looks like a white desert made of salt, stretching as far as the eye can see.

When it rains, it becomes a giant mirror that reflects the sky.

Salar de Uyuni was formed from a dried-up lake and is full of salt and minerals.

It is a stunning natural wonder and a popular place for tourists and photographers.

The Whispering Hole

One summer evening, Max and his sister Lena were camping near an old forest in the mountains. An old man in the village told them about a deep, dark cave nearby. He said no one who entered ever came back. The cave was called the Whispering Hole. People said it was haunted. Max and Lena were curious. The next morning, they followed a small path through the trees. Soon, they found the cave. The entrance was wide and black, like a giant mouth. Cold air came from inside, even though the day was hot. They turned on their flashlights and stepped in. Inside, the cave it was silent. Drops of water fell from the ceiling. Their footsteps echoed. Strange shapes were on the walls. As they went deeper, they heard something — a soft whisper. It sounded like someone was calling their names: "Max... Lena..."

They stopped. The whisper came again, louder. Then they saw a shadow move across the wall. Lena grabbed Max's hand. "We should go," she said. But the path behind them looked different, as if the cave had changed. Suddenly, their lights started to flicker. In the dim light, they saw a pale face with no eyes. It floated in the air and whispered, "Stay with me..." Max and Lena screamed and ran. They finally found the exit and rushed outside. The sunlight never felt so warm. They didn't look back. Since that day, they never returned. But sometimes, when it's quiet, they still hear the whisper: "Max... Lena..."
